Letter from the Senior Editor.

DANVILLE, Oct. 22, 1841.

To G. R. Weber, Esq.

DEAR SIR:—On arriving at Paris, last week, I found that Judge Wilson was sick, and that no court would consequently be held. I then proceeded to Terre Haute, Indiana, and saw my old friends Messrs. T. & J. Dowling. The latter was elected State Senator of Indiana last session, and has since been engaged in all the duties of the office, and during an illness of 3 years. I found his wife a little alarmed at "new Chapman, crow" should strain his upper into his costume, as Sheridan & Sutton did those of Messrs. Blair & Rives in the Senate of the United States last spring. I told him that, in my opinion, the fundamental theory would follow no such unknown example as had been set by the whigs of the State of Indiana on that occasion; who, while professing the most sacred regard for contracts, had violated that between the U. S. Senate and Messrs. Blair & Rives; and that I did not believe Mr. Chapman would be the recipient of so effective a lie to hold at the rendezvous of principle.

Mr. T. Dowling, Circuit Clerk of the County, and who enumerated the paper many years ago at Terre Haute, talks of starting another whig paper there. His opposition to Hunting-ton (his new Commissioner of the General Land Office,) was bitter. Thos. Dowling procured him the powerful opposition of the Rush clique thereupon, and of the whig party at that place as every where else. The money of this clique enabled them to transfer the Courier to a friend of Huntington's, and Judge Cesar—a good, straight-laced whig about 35—to Vincennes. Mr. Watson also is not an editor, whatever he may have done as a lawyer. I don't know any home of his, however, and he will not long be in any one town where he is, as I have no doubt does every document in my county!

You would no longer be surprised at the election of Mr. Bigger, if you had seen the vote I have. He is a plain, straight-forward man, esteemed for his candor, firmness, and honesty. He was acquainted with most of the other estimable gentlemen of both political parties and met everywhere where I did. I personally knows. As they are not public men, however, they would not think me for naming them.

Mr. Watterson, (late Commissioner of the General Land Office,) resided here in the Federal opinions and to make a place for Hunting-ton, who resided in the vicinity of the Wabash Haute. Seldom have I become acquainted with a more intelligent and practical man, and although reserved, rarely office on account of his political opinions, he enjoys the confidence and respect of the people. He had been long and retained from Washington. He says all men he has report but a minority of 300 votes for Mr. Clay as impossible. No wonder they do. The only wonder is, that there should ever have been so many. Mr. Watterson is a thoroughly intelligent gentleman, and a most effective writer of monopoly in Congress—the further of a U. S. Bank owned and controlled by a few individuals, possessing the corrupt power of discounting at leisure, and which was to gratuitously operation upon the stockholders paying at only 10 per cent, leaving them the power to borrow the remaining 90 out of the Bank itself! What could be more effectual to enslave and degrade by the honest yoke of John Tyler!—Sooner would the whole nation whig.

I arrived at Danville yesterday, and found no court in session. Judge Wilson is sick, and will sick. No courts have been held in the circuit this fall so far. The people were there on the 4th of the. They say that if Judge Wilson's health will not permit him to attend court, he ought to resign his office, and let some competent man take his place. This matter of holding the office for life is all bosh, republican. I have seen here Mr. Walker, Mr. Nine, Mr. Bodwell, Mr. Cravens, and others of our friends. Mr. Nine will be very excellent in the author of an able report concerning the Winnebago Indians, made about 2 years ago.

The right spirit prevails every where I have been among the Democracy. The Democratic Convention to nominate candidates for Governor and Lieut. Governor will be well attended. Our friends are full of enthusiasm, and alive to the importance of meeting Federalism with a bold and unhesitating opposition.

Danville is a pretty place, beautifully situated, and having excellent society. The country is one very similar to that of one of them in particular (Mrs. B.) could, I believe, give either of us lessons in horsemanship. We have been gratified during my stay in the place. There is not so much business done in Danville as formerly owing to the suspension of our public works. The heavy portion of the Northern Cross railroad is finished to this place. There heavy stone piers now raise their heads 40 feet above the bed of the Big Vermilion river below, and much of the embankment of the road here is completed. Large piles of lumber are on the ground, which will be used for the superstructure. It could even say very little respecting to completion of the Northern cross railroad from Springfield to the Wabash beyond here. Were it finished to that work, in complete order, we could go to ruin unless finished. The Indiana canal, I find, is almost ready to leave the water of Lake Erie, and by the completion of the comparatively small portion of road between Springfield and the Wabash, the chain of communication between the Mississippi and New York would be complete. The people here generally are in favor of giving up the road to a private company's management on any options, rather than suffer it to be the State. The trouble has been, in other States, with these private companies, that they manage to make the State pay all the cost, while they pocket the profits.

But I must close the letter. Squire yourself up to Sangamo Sun, and don't let him ride over you while I'm away. If he says anything more about our swallowing treacly too freely, tell him to send over that quarter I paid for carrying him home, the night before I left. It he complains about the price, you can inform him that the company charged a little extra for the food on account of its weight. It heap so terribly cooked in liquor!

I shall write you again from Cole, where I shall be next week.

Yours truly, W. W.

Chicago Democrat.

We had not intended to pay so much attention to the editor of the Democrat, as for a concerted movement. We thought it to ignore the character and destroy the influence of our paper it is keeping with the position we have always taken as successful. He has been offended and he takes his revenge by the grossest abuse. We have met the adjournment of the late session of the Legislature, it is consequently an inconsiderable affair upon the private character of its members—and the Democratic members in particular—to the daily and injustice of such a course. The whole Democracy of the South as well as the North could not be a stain on a single name. The two conformed in motive, uniformed, and influenced by the same principles. Democratic principles by abusing Democrats—differ, as he calls it, the mind by abusing the people of the State except in and about Chicago. Even Mr. Cook has not the effect of a fight, till on friend and foe. He has got angry with Mr. Peck, and he abuses every body who he thinks Mr. Peck may have a friend—he imagines that he sees him in every bush of the forest. Mr. Peck is a gentleman looks at him." This exhibits a diseased mind and a disordered imagination, which we can only to pity. He pretends to know Mr. Peck's style and he has the impudence to say that he has written the printing is ours. He is no doubt aware of his mistake in relation to the authorship of the article of the 15th, but he knows that His friend in Will county has authored him of the fact, and that he has published it, as well as other men, may see in judgment. He is highly displeased because we have called him to account for his refusal to defend himself over his own signature. This is not very much to be wondered at, when he commenced with his own paper, in full utmost, and do my him for a single moment to suppose that he has not entangled them in its meshes, always supposing that he has ever had the least conscious of democracy, which is the largest liberty. Democracy has a standard of principles, and it cherishes the memory of the illustrious men who have established them. It appreciates and wishes that all men shall enjoy life, liberty, and the right of the pursuit of happiness, free from distinctions and unnecessary immunity as possible. Its motto is "every man to stand up for yourself," therefore it sinks deep into the hearts of the multitude, and finds succor and support in the people.

Federalism rides always upon the expedient, and is therefore a fitful and capricious one. Its accomplishment of them, it sometimes wears a goodly outside, but within is full of all uncleanness. Its principles are selfish, and its actors are no sooner in power, than they are quarrelling over the spoils of office, and the prodangerous as to their measures and the policy which they pursue, and are holding up to ridicule the possible conduct in all its native blackness.

The moment says: "Let Jonah go overboard and all is quiet." Does the editor mean then and we will be quiet? Let him go overboard—if Democracy the storm will continue. Let us not act as unwisely as the ancients, who, when they found a Democrat board in sincerest may prevent him from the evil we would suffer, by the most unrighteous acts on us.

Into the latter about which he muses such a pother, we cannot suppose it written in Springfield. Certain we are it was written in Springfield. Certain we are it was written in Springfield. Certain we are it was
